

The FCC should not implement any proposal to lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law protection. We have stopped being interrupted at home in the evening while having dinner and while helping our children with their school work. We use to receive 2 or 3 calls every night 7 days a week. Since we have registered in October we have only received 1 call which was left on voicemail by a computer while we were at work. We have not received any in the evening which interrupted our dinner or quality time with our children. Indiana's Telephone Law has been a blessing to us by stopping these unwanted calls so we may be able to spend the time in peace without interruption of a phone call trying to sell us something we do not want. If I want something, I look it up on the internet and find the best deal for myself without being pressured. I can press a button to exit if I do not want it and not have to argue with someone about why I do not want their product and cant take NO Thank You for an answer, and receive the same call again the next day. I think Indiana's Telephone Law is great, please leave it alone.
